Yuqing Xing joined the Asian Development Bank Institute in 2011 as the Director of the Capacity Building and Training Department. Prior to joining ADBI, he was Professor of Economics and the Director of the Asian Economic Policy Program of the National Graduate Institute for Policy Studies in Tokyo, where he was the chief architect of the executive training program, "Japan-IMF Macroeconomic Seminar for Asia". Before joining GRIPS, he was Professor of Economics and the Director of the International Development Program at the International University of Japan. At both GRIPS and IUJ he managed the Japan-IMF Scholarship Program for Asia and the Japanese Grant Aid for Human Resource Development Scholarship.

Dr. Xing also held the positions of Sabbatical Fellow at the World Institute for Development Economics Research, and Visiting Professor at the Institute of Advanced Studies, both at the United Nations University; Visiting Senior Research Fellow at the East Asian Institute of the National University of Singapore; and Visiting Researcher at ADBI. He also provided consulting services to the Asian Development Bank.

Dr. Xing's researches focus on international trade, FDI, exchange rates, and regional economic integration in Asia. He has published numerous articles in international refereed journals. His published research on the iPhone and the Sino-US trade balance has been discussed widely in the mainstream media, such as The Wall Street Journal, The Financial Times, The New York Times, Time Magazine, Forbes Magazine, Foreign Policy, National Public Radio of the United States, etc., challenging conventional views on bilateral trade statistics and instigating a reform of trade statistics.

Dr. Xing earned his M.A. degree from Peking University and received his Ph.D. in Economics from the University of Illinois.
